Life and Donations Sermon, April 15, 2018

Text: Luke 24:32-48

I can't help but noting today is April 15. Some of us in the congregation may be more aware of this notorious date than others, especially those of us who are required to pay/withhold our own taxes. I'm one of those who waits until the last legal moment to file my taxes ... and it's not due to procrastination, it is a matter of principle. I want to hold onto my money as long as possible (and thus allow it to gain interest) before handing it over to the I.R.S. I learned the deadline in 2018 is April 17 nationwide, not the usual April 15. Part of the reason for that is today is Sunday, and the I.R.S. is closed on Sunday. The other part is that the city of Washington, D.C. is officially closed tomorrow, and as D.C. is the home of the I.R.S., that pushes the tax deadline to the next day for the entire nation.

Benjamin Franklin's oft-quoted maxim from a 1789 letter to Jean-Baptiste Leroy: "Our new constitution is now established, and has an appearance that promises permanency, but in this world nothing can be said to be certain but death and taxes." In today's reading, the disciples might respond, "Well, Mr. Franklin, now we can't even be certain about death!" Because of Jesus' resurrection, death no longer has the final word on Life! Easter emphatically claims death is not the final curtain. The sermon title is a bit of a play on Mr. Franklin's saying, in terms of opposites. A quick look at a thesaurus will give you these antonyms of death: Life! Being! Animation! Birth! Consciousness! Existence! Finding antonyms for "tax" was a little more difficult, but I found it helpful to start in the thesaurus with synonyms for Tax: Burden. Encumber. Wear. Tire. Oppress. Strain. Drain. Weary. Demand. Load. Task. Antonyms include the following: Relief! Aid! Benefit! Blessing! Give! Unburden! Uplift! Energize! Invigorate! Inspire! Donation!

The Christian faith is largely and primarily about the antonyms! It is about LIFE and GIVING (or Donations), not Death and Taxes. In today's reading, Jesus makes clear to the disciples He is alive ... He is not a ghost; He is the opposite of a ghost ... He is a living, animated being. And here He recruits as witnesses other living beings, people with bodies. He wants them to move out and tell everyone who will listen about what makes for real life, not to go out there and tax others with additional burdens. That's what this back-to-life Jesus wants of His disciples: living witnesses. Not airy spirits or pious ghosts or frail wraiths haunting a pew somewhere, and/or who enjoy scaring people from time to time, but living, breathing, active, loving bodies that witness to life, working to comfort (not scare) others and to bring life and hope and mercy and relief and aid and benefit and blessing to all about us. And there's a sermon in itself here, but Jesus wants living bodies like His own, who, if they take this call to be His living witnesses seriously, will eventually have some real wounds to show ... but it'll be worth it.

In today's reading we are where we were last week when we looked at John's gospel, in that locked room on Easter Sunday night; today's account is the more detailed story from Luke's perspective. It has been two days since Jesus was crucified, and the Eleven (except, as John notes, for Thomas, who apparently had either stepped out for a time or missed the gathering altogether) were gathered together along with some others who had known Jesus well. When they got together, what they probably did was just talk, which is what people normally do when they are trying to make sense of a great loss. Eventually someone broiled up some fish, because eating is always a part of these gatherings. You eat, you talk, you settle into your grief, you eat some more ... not unlike one of the collations so elegantly hosted by our Presbyterian Women downstairs following a funeral. If you have lost someone you love, you know this scene all too well. People come together, you speak in quiet tones, you talk about the deceased, you relate fond memories, you tell stories. You try to remember better days, and many are still fighting tears. You wonder how you will carry on without this person who was so important in your life, so much a part of your life. And of course, there is always someone in the room trying to get you to eat.

Well, the conversation that evening of the first Sunday of Easter certainly wasn't like that of a typical Fellowship Hall collation ... because earlier that morning some of the women in their group had gone to Jesus' tomb and found it empty. These women told this story about angels telling them Jesus wasn't there because He had risen from the dead. But some of the men may have been skeptical. Perhaps they're thinking to themselves, "Hysterical women." To them, the empty tomb speaks of grave robbers, further desecration to their Lord's body, and they're probably thinking, "Oh, when will they just leave Him alone?" I'm sure the cynics in the room are thinking grief can do tricky things; you can hear voices and feel presences and "see" people who just aren't there. "Come on folks. Get over it. He's gone. I know it hurts, but we must deal with it and move on." And then ... one of the men, one of "The Eleven" (as the disciples were known after Juda's betrayal and death), one who perhaps knew Jesus better than all the others, he comes with a report that he saw the risen Lord. And after hearing from Peter, then these two others come in with their report that Jesus had appeared to them on their way to Emmaus (and at least one of them was a man); so they are all abuzz in that room when suddenly, everybody noticed Jesus standing right there in their midst! I imagine everyone just stopped talking. Jesus sees them all staring at Him and He says, "Peace be with you." The text says, "They were startled and frightened, thinking they saw a ghost." Peace was about the last thing that was with them at this point! So Jesus then says: "Why are you troubled?" Well, why do you think?! They had all seen him killed!

Jesus goes on to ask them a question He had asked them often in the past three years, and a question he would ask Thomas later: "Why do doubts rise in your minds?" Sometimes we do have difficulty seeing and believing what is plainly right there in front of us. What is true, what is real, what is good, what is right can be staring us right in the face, and we continue to profess our doubts about it. As mentioned last week, we don't necessarily believe what we see; we tend to see what we believe. They are looking right at the risen Jesus, but still they had their doubts. So Jesus says, "Look at my hands and my feet. It's me! It really is! Touch me and see; a ghost does not have flesh and bones" As they all begin to grasp it really is a living Jesus standing with them, we are told they still did not believe it because of joy and amazement. And that makes sense; sometimes the stumbling block to belief is we don't trust something that's just too good to be true! V. 41, "while they still did not believe it because of joy and amazement, he asked them, 'Do you have anything here to eat?'" And someone from the Collation Committee said, "Somebody get the man a seafood salad sandwich!"

Actually, they gave him some broiled fish. I can see them handing Jesus the piece of fish and staring, watching His every move as He takes it, puts it in His mouth, chews, swallows ... and it stays inside Him! He's real! Jesus, who on Good Friday was completely dead, is now so completely alive He is eating some fish right there in the room with them. He is risen indeed! There was some talk in the early centuries of the church that maybe Jesus was some sort of a ghost when He came back, a spirit, an apparition, or even a mass hallucination of profoundly grief-stricken followers. But this was not a ghost. He is not a shadow of His former self; He is His former self! This is not a meta-physical encounter; this is a physical encounter. This is not an illusion, not a hallucination, but living flesh and bone. He is the opposite of a ghost; He is a substantial, tangible, animated, living, fish-eating being!

In folklore, ghosts are believed to be the disembodied spirits of human beings who have "unfinished business," (which is the story line of that old Patrick Swayze and Whoopie Goldberg movie, "Ghost"). Such ghosts are said to be unable to move on until they have completed their unfinished business and can be "at peace" and then they can move on to that Bright Place where good ghosts are supposed to go (according to Hollywood, anyway). Well, Jesus is no ghost, but He most certainly does have unfinished business with the world ... and He is here with the disciples making His unfinished business their business. Note that this passage is at the end of Luke's Gospel, it is also the prelude to Luke's second volume, The Acts of the Apostles, which tells how the disciples go out on Jesus' behalf, making Jesus' business their business: witnessing, preaching, teaching, healing, and otherwise being Christ's living hands, feet, and voice in their world ... the living Body of Christ.

And we are called to be that body, the living body, of Christ. We are not called to ghost-hood. A ghost is just a shadow, a vision without substance, a passing apparition. A ghost can't really do much practical good, except perhaps hauntingly remind people of the life it used to have once upon a time and perhaps give a good scare once in a while. The "Ghost Church" stands in the community almost like a quaint haunted house ... oh, people know it's there; but if they notice it at all, it's mainly as a point of curiosity; it's that harmless old haunt where odd things go on from time to time led by people in strange robes accompanied by eerie organ music. But we are called to be a living body, not a ghost. People who encounter the living church should encounter this Body the same way the disciples encountered Jesus ... as a living, breathing, vital and engaged entity! A living Body vividly proclaims the life it has in all it does; it is active, alive, engaging, loving and carrying on its assigned business with love and vigor. It is not about death, it's about life! It's not about taxes, as in taxing others with burdens of quilt and fear; it is about giving and helping and redeeming and restoring! It is actively engaging, it breathes, it shares its life, it is generous with its resources, it seeks to do good things and to grow and live and thrive and improve and make the most of every opportunity to help others grow and thrive and come to life as well. It upholds, and proclaims, and faithfully lives by values and ideals and morals and principles that are not dead, but are timeless, eternal, ever vital, life giving and life enhancing (in fact, to not uphold and teach and honor those values and principles only serves to burden others, not set them free)! It seeks to embrace and bolster and encourage those who have fallen or failed and want to reclaim their life for a more hopeful future! We are called to be a living body, not a ghost.

Now I know this congregation knows this well, and amply demonstrates it by its devotion to mission, by its caring, by its loving ministry to those in need, by its witness to the reality of Christ, by being attentive to each other's needs and the needs of others, by hosting May Breakfasts to raise funds for missions, by hosting fellowship activities and retreats and youth mission trips and Sunday School classes for people of all ages to help them find meaning and purpose and joy and fulfillment and valuable principles in life! But, the reminder doesn't hurt ... we are called to be a living body, witnessing to the life and reality of our risen Lord in all we do to a world so much in need of the presence and touch of a living, breathing, real Jesus.
