

FROM ONE RICH YOUNG RULER TO ANOTHER

Sermon, October 14, 2018

Text: Mark 10:17-31

"It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God."

That is one of the more difficult statements of Jesus. Many interpretations have surfaced over the centuries attempting to explain this rather unusual metaphor. One interpretation, first posited by Cyril of Alexandria in the third century, is that there is a linguistic similarity between the Greek word for camel, kamelos, and the Greek word kamilos, which is a large rope ... a rope, by the way, which also can be made from camel's hair. So, perhaps "camel" was a nickname for this rope.

Another interpretation that surfaced in the ninth century is that in most walled cities there were huge gates, great main entryways through which all trade and traffic moved. These gates would have massive doors which would be closed, locked, barred and guarded by night to protect the city from marauders. Beside some of these gates there was a much smaller doorway. When the great main gates were closed and locked and guarded at night, the only way into the city was through the little gate, through which one person or one animal at a time would get through, and then only under the watchful eye of the gate keeper. The only way a laden camel could get through was to take everything off the camel, compel the camel to let go of everything it was hanging onto and almost kneel as it wiggles through. According to some medieval scholars, this little gate would sometimes be called ... you guessed it ... "The Needle's Eye." The obvious analogy, then, would be that to enter the gateway to the City of God and its life abundant and eternal, one must be willing to let go of everything, kneel before the One at the gate, and enter in humility and penitence (one mild problem is that there seems to be no extent archeological evidence for this little aperture, only the words of some medieval scholars attest to it).

A third possibility is that Jesus meant a real live hairy long-necked hump-backed camel. The camel was the biggest critter they knew in Palestine, and Jesus meant to paint this rather absurd picture of the huge beast, the largest of animals in Palestine, trying to get through the smallest of holes. He used this ridiculous imagery in order to create a vivid, memorable illustration communicating that finding the way into fullness in life, purpose in life, eternal life is just impossible ... without letting go and letting God. Mark 10:27: "With man this is impossible, but not with God; all things are possible with God."

We really don't know which is the proper interpretation, rope, gate or actual camel, but it doesn't matter ... I think they're all good!

The setting in which this metaphor was used is that one morning a man ran up to Jesus, threw himself down on his knees in front of the Lord, and said, "Good teacher, what must I do to inherit eternal life?" Now, many have traditionally understood this question to be, "What do I have to do to get to heaven when I die?" But some don't think so. The ancient Greek term translated "eternal" has other nuances to it that don't necessarily apply to quantitative time; nuances such as fullness, richness, abundance ... nuances that are about quality of life as opposed to quantity of life. Think of a moment or a time in your life that was just so full, so rich, that you just wanted the clock to stop, you never wanted that time to end ... well, that could be part of the nuance of this man's use of the Greek term "eternal," as in "timeless." Lending a little weight to this argument is that the word translated "life" is not the ancient Greek word "bios" (βίος), which means physical life, but the word is "zoe" (ζωή) which implies more of a quality of life. (Please bear with me for this potentially boring grammar lesson, but I think it'll be helpful.) In English, we talk about "living," as in breathing, and we talk about "living," as in "living it up." The latter implies vigorous fullness, rich fulfillment, quality enjoyment ... a zestful life, a life that is full to the hilt. Where we use the one word "live" to mean two relatively different things, the Greeks used two ... again, "bios" is the living, heart-beating, biological life, and "zoe" is the living-it-up, zestful, full-to-the hilt, quality-kind of life. Somebody can be "bios" alive, but "zoe" dead; in the current vernacular, that's someone who needs to "get a life." I really don't think this rich young man is asking about "pie in the sky in the by and by when I die;" I think he is asking the same very practical question many people are asking every day: "What do I have to do to get a good and full life, a life so full I just don't want it to ever end? A life that makes me want to get out of bed and say, 'Good morning, Lord!' instead of 'Good Lord, it's morning!?' What is it that I have to do to get my life ... right?"

Jesus' immediate response to this question is to say, "Why do you call me good? No one is good except God alone." This is a mini-sermon in itself, but Jesus is intimating that if you really want to know about what's good, then the first step is to get right with the One true source of Goodness. Jesus goes on to say, "You know the commandments: Do not murder, do not commit adultery, do not steal or bear false witness, honor your father and mother." The man says, "Jesus, I kept all of these things since I was a boy," as if to say, "Jesus -- there has to be more to it than that! There has to be more to life than just living by the rules." Now, from Matthew's account we know this man is young, and from Luke's account we know he is in a position of authority and power, and we know from all three accounts that he is rich (hence the Rich Young Ruler ... Mark doesn't tell us that he's young or a ruler, but Matthew and Luke fill in those details) AND that we know from all three accounts he's conscientiously, and I believe sincerely, religious. He's probably worked hard to be good at life and he's probably worked hard to be good in life, and apparently he's done so throughout his life ... and that's commendable! But now he's here on his knees before Jesus, because I think he's discovered no matter how hard he works at life, no matter how good his life gets, he can't seem to get it quite good enough.

The next thing we are told is that Jesus, looking at him, loved him. This is so important; don't miss it! Jesus was visibly and obviously moved to compassion for this young aristocrat, so much so that Mark, alone among the Gospel writers, felt compelled to record it. See the eyes of Jesus just fill with compassion for this honorable man who really does seem to want to do the right things with his life, a man who really does seem to want to do the right thing with his wealth and his position of authority; he really does want to get it "right" with his life which he just knows isn't good enough. It's the same love I believe Jesus has in looking at each and every one of us this morning each and every time we come to Jesus asking Him, "How do I get my life right?" Whenever we do that, Jesus just fills with love for us, like He did this man. Those of us who are parents may have a special insight into this kind of love. I've told this story before, but I remember sixteen years ago almost like it was yesterday, when my then five-year-old Hannah was trying to draw a picture for me, a picture of a horse. She was working so intently and even feverishly on this thing, when all of a sudden I saw her little face wrinkle up, the bottom lip start to tremble, and her obvious frustration building ... seems she picked up the wrong crayon to color the sky and was SO upset that she messed up the picture she was trying to get "good enough" for Dad, and she burst into tears. So, what did I do? Well, I didn't spank her for messing up the picture! No, I loved her all the more; it was so endearing! Too many people think Jesus is just waiting to WHACK us when we don't do things "good enough." No, He loves us, and especially so when we are trying hard to do what is right and good!

I think another reason Jesus may have looked with love at this young man is that they have something in common. Jesus was probably feeling something along these lines: "I'm a young man, too." We often don't think of it, but Jesus is about thirty-one years of age, here. And maybe He's thinking as He looks at this rich young man of authority and power on his knees before Him, "I'm also a rich young ruler, far richer than you, far richer than you can imagine." Think of it: All the wealth, power, glory in the universe was His, and Jesus left it. As Paul puts it in 2 Corinthians 8:9, "For you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich, yet for your sake He became poor, so that you through His poverty might become rich." Imagine Jesus thinking as He speaks to this young man, "I'm a rich young ruler, too. I have riches beyond anything you ever had or could even dream about! I have given it all up to follow the will of My Father. I'm not asking you to do anything I haven't already done! So, from one rich young ruler to another, let me say this -- Do you want real treasure? Then let go what you are hanging onto, sell what you have and give to the poor, then come follow Me ... and you will have treasure in heaven." And as Jesus tells the disciples later, no one who has left anything for Him will fail to be rewarded a hundredfold.

So much that I'll have to leave unsaid about this passage due to constraints of time; I just end with this: This man was on his knees before Jesus, which is good. But can he let go of everything as Jesus asks him to? Well, apparently not. And as we read the plain words of the text here we have to wonder: Can he let go of ANYTHING Jesus asks him to let go of? Maybe this is reading between the lines, but it seems to me that this young aristocrat walks away much too readily! Jesus says something hard, and he splits. He takes off. His "commitment" wanes. He doesn't inquire, he doesn't seek clarification, he just ... leaves. Jesus asks him to do something difficult, and he says, "Goodbye." By the way, this is not a test that Christ gives to everyone. Having said that, though, let me add a caveat: We may not be asked to give up everything to follow Jesus. But you can be sure you may be asked to give up something. And if we have never given up anything out of love for and obedience to Jesus Christ, then we really need to examine the level and sincerity of our commitment.

On the cross, Jesus gave up everything, even His life, for each one of us. Will we be willing to trust Him with everything in return?
