

MAKING JESUS STOP

Sermon, June 27, 2021

Text: Mark 5:21-36

Mark's gospel (or, if you remember from last week, the Gospel according to Peter) is a rather concise, action-packed account of Jesus' life and ministry. In the first two chapters there are no lengthy genealogies, no Christmas stories, no Mary and Joseph or little towns of Bethlehem, no wise men bringing gifts and no guiding stars, no Simeons or Annas at the temple. Mark just plunges right into the action of Jesus' adult ministry in these first two chapters with His baptism, His temptation, His calling of the disciples, His taking on evil spirits, His healings. By the time we get to chapter three, we read, "a large crowd from Galilee followed him, [for] they heard all that he was doing, they came to him in great numbers from Judea, Jerusalem, Idumea, beyond the Jordan, and [from] around Tyre and Sidon." The crowd had grown so large that Jesus told His disciples to prepare a boat and push out a bit from shore, so He could "socially distance" Himself from the crowd so they would not crush Him as they pressed in ... now, that's a lot of people! In that same boat, chapter four, Jesus calmed a storm at sea, and we are told the disciples were amazed, and even a bit terrified. Chapter Five picks up after that storm, they had crossed over the Sea of Galilee (which is actually a large inland lake, which I've read is about 90 times smaller than Lake Erie, one of our great lakes) to a non-Jewish area where Jesus healed a man who was driven out of his mind by a legion of demonic, evil spirits. Jesus cast the demons into a herd of two thousand pigs, and that whole herd of "deviled ham" threw themselves over a cliff into the water below; we are then told by Mark that everyone was amazed, not just the disciples. When Jesus and the disciples return to the other side of the sea in today's reading, to Capernaum, we find an ever increasing crowd waiting for Him. Mark's action-packed drama just keeps building and building, the crowd gathering around Jesus keeps growing and growing, and Jesus keeps going and going.

In Mark's building drama the next person who appears is Jairus. Jairus is the prominent leader of the local synagogue in Capernaum; you may remember Jesus spent a lot of time in Capernaum. This distinguished leader throws himself at Jesus' feet, in full view of this growing crowd, pleading with Jesus to come to his home and heal his twelve year old little daughter. We are told in other sources that the synagogue had already taken a public position on Jesus, calling Him a false messiah. So, this really wasn't a good career move for this synagogue leader. After all, it was his job to keep the crowds away from false hopes, false teachings, and manipulative "saviors" who promise you miracles while simultaneously jockeying for power and/or emptying your wallets. The last thing Jairus ought to be doing is giving this "false messiah" public credibility by pleading at His feet in full view of this very large crowd. But when your child is dying ... when anyone you love is enduring great suffering ... you're not thinking much about good career moves or your public image. You're not thinking about much else at all; all you're thinking about is the suffering of the one you cherish. Everything else in your world just stops. Actually, it doesn't stop ... and that's one of the most maddening things experienced by those who grieve, as many of you know. For everyone else, the world just goes on as normal, but for you, your world has stopped ... nothing else matters. Jairus will do anything to save his little girl. So, he pleads for Jesus to come to his house, Jesus accepts his invitation, and they head off to Jairus' home.

Now, this was a big deal! Jairus was an important person, and Jesus now has an opportunity to have influence with this man of power and prestige. The growing crowd was excited! Something of a parade developed around them as they walked, the drama continues to build, and suddenly, this is all interrupted. Something happens that makes Jesus ... and everyone else who is on the move in Mark's drama ... stop. "And there was a woman who had been subject to bleeding for twelve years." Which, coincidentally or not, is the entire lifespan of Jairus' daughter ... this anonymous woman had been hemorrhaging as long as Jairus' daughter had been in this world.

Now, Jesus is on His way to an important appointment! The crowds are with Him, they're following Him, and He has an invitation to the home of the biggest cheese in town. This is His great opportunity! Don't stop now, Jesus! Besides, the average triage nurse in any ER would say this anonymous woman is not a priority; she's been ill for a long time, but this little girl is dying and should get the physician's primary attention right away! But the Divine Physician has priorities of His own, and He stops the parade for this one ordinary, anonymous, seemingly unimportant woman in the crowd.

Mark tells us that "she had suffered a great deal under the care of many physicians, and had spent all she had, yet instead of growing better she grew worse." Some of you have been there ... many of us know from personal experience that even today with all the modern marvels the medical profession is often more of an art than a science; doctors can misdiagnose and/or conflict with each other as they try to "follow the science" and, at times, make matters worse rather than better. To be sure, medicine is an honorable profession, and we owe very much to the dedicated professionals and the advances in medicine we all enjoy ... but even the best professionals and the most extensive research and development have their limits. By the way, if you ARE in the medical profession, you may prefer to read this story in Luke's Gospel (Luke 8). Luke was a doctor himself, and he conveniently leaves out this part about "suffering under many physicians, and spending all she had, and getting worse." But not Mark. It's as if Mark wants to press this point: THIS WOMAN HAS DONE EVERYTHING SHE CAN DO. She really has tried to get well. And now she is all out of money, she is all out of expert advice, all out of hope. Yet, the bleeding continues. In fact, it's worse.

I think Mark, the author of this text, puts something of a literary magnifying glass up to the crowd around Jesus and is focusing our vision on just one ordinary person in it ... one ordinary person who is bleeding, one ordinary person who has a hemorrhaging that just won't stop. Maybe Mark does this because she is typical ... typical of any one of the many individuals who make up any crowd that has gathered around Jesus. I've been a pastor long enough to know that many of us in the crowd gathering around Jesus each week in worship are quietly bleeding ... some may be bleeding physically with a chronic medical problem; some may be bleeding emotionally, spiritually, psychologically ... and at times it seems the hemorrhaging just won't stop. You're not exactly dying, but you're not exactly living, either. I think it's a safe bet to say that each and every one of us is dealing to some degree or another with something that just isn't right; in fact, if you knew what the people sitting next to you in these pews this morning are dealing with in their own lives, I think you'd be truly overwhelmed. For that matter, there isn't a person in any crowd who isn't dealing or coping with something. That is our lot in a fallen world.

There is something wrong with everything and everyone; it may vary by degree or intensity or longevity, but no one is spared. By the way, there's also something right and good and praiseworthy with everything and everyone, and it is good to think about what is right and good and praiseworthy and to encourage and promote and affirm what is right and good and praiseworthy, but that's another sermon. I've quoted this before, and I'm sure to quote it a few more times before I retire, but Ann Landers once wrote, "Be kind to people. The world needs kindness so much. You never know what sort of battles other people are fighting. Often just a soft word or a warm compliment can be immensely supportive. You can do a great deal of good by just being considerate, by extending a little friendship, going out of your way to do just one nice thing, or saying one good word (emphasis added)." We come across people every single day who are quietly bleeding. Maybe that's Mark's subtle point in calling attention to this one anonymous afflicted woman.

In humility, she came up quietly behind Him, knelt down on the ground in reverence and respect, and quietly reached out her hand to touch the hem of His robe. We are told that immediately her bleeding stopped. And just as immediately, Jesus stops the parade. He looks at the disciples and asks, "Who touched me?" The disciples think He has to be kidding. "Who touched you? Jesus, half of Galilee is out here trying to get their hands on you. Come on, keep moving to Jairus' home. Don't get sidetracked! Let's go!" But Jesus knows how to pay attention to the moment at hand. He wants to respond to someone who has reached out and touched Him in faith, not grabbing at Him or grabbing something from Him or pressing in on Him just to be around Him, but humbly reaching out and touching Him as if she were laying hands on something holy. When He finds her, He does something He never does anywhere else in the Bible ... He calls her "Daughter." "Daughter, your faith has healed you. Go in peace and be freed from your suffering."

In calling this anonymous, hurt, spent woman "Daughter," Jesus publicly gives her the same relationship to Him that Jairus has with his daughter. The twelve year old little girl was important in the eyes of the crowd because she belonged to an important local leader. This woman was made a somebody in the eyes of the crowd as she was acknowledged as the daughter of an important leader as well ... a daughter of the Lord of lords and King of kings.

This interruption and delay does have its price. Word comes that the daughter of Jairus has died; we'll look at that next week (maybe; I haven't decided yet). But for now, I want to note that I believe this text teaches this basic principle that we who reach out in sincere and humble faith are put into a relationship with Jesus, a healing relationship. As we reach out to Him in reverence and humility, may Jesus stop for us, and say: "Daughter. Son. Your faith has made you well, Go in peace, and be free."
