

THE ORIGINAL WATER FLUME AT ROCKY POINT

Sermon, March 12, 2023

Texts: Exodus 17:1-7; Psalm 95; Romans 5:1-11

In the Psalter we read this morning, God was speaking through the Psalmist (Psalm 95:8-9), "Do not harden your hearts as you did at Meribah, as you did that day at Massah in the desert, where your fathers tested and tried Me, though they had seen what I did." He is referring to the event recorded in our Old Testament reading from Exodus 17:1-7, there we read about Massah/Meribah, a rocky point (figuratively and literally!) in the Hebrews' desert journey where they ran out of water. ¹ By the way, this word "test" in the Hebrew can also be translated "trial," putting God to the test or putting God on trial are one and the same in the Hebrew language, which Psalm 95 underscores: "... where your fathers tested and tried Me."

At this point of the Exodus journey the Israelites were (understandably) terrified they were going to die of thirst. We have to remember, though, as hinted in the Psalm, just how much they had recently seen of God's grace and intervention. In the previous six months the Israelites had witnessed the ten plagues God sent upon Egypt compelling Pharaoh to let them go, they had walked on dry land through the parted waters of the Red Sea and witnessed the drowning of the pursuing Egyptian army when God closed the waters upon them, they had seen the daily pillar of cloud leading them by day and protecting them from the sun by day and the nightly pillar of fire going on before them to lead the way at night, they had experienced the miraculous sweetening of a reservoir of bitter water, and they had received the daily gift of manna from heaven. Despite experiencing all these incredible miracles and more in the past six months, nobody says, "Wow, I can't wait to see what God's going to do now! This is great! I wonder how He's going to come up with water out here?" Nobody says that. Instead, what they say is, "Why have you brought us into the desert to die? Are you among us or not?" Again, what they are doing is essentially putting God "on trial."

Speaking of rocky points, I'm told there's an experience of another Rocky Point etched on the collective memory of Rhode Islanders. Virtually every adult native Rhode Islander over, oh, 35 or so has some personal memory of happy times at nearby Rocky Point, whether it was first jobs, first dates, eating clamcakes and chowder at the World's Largest Shore Dinner Hall, attending concerts on the Midway, riding the Corkscrew, the Cyclone, the Freefall (falling 13 stories at 55 mph), riding the Music Express, the Bumper Cars and, of course, the Water Flume. Since 1847, when it was first used for nature outings, Rocky Point was Rhode Island's working-class shoreline resort. In 1872, the New York Times hailed Rocky Point as "one of the most delightful places upon the New-England coast," a place "... exceedingly popular with the masses as a delightful spot to spend a few days from the hurry and hustle of daily life." Rocky Point was a place of relaxation, refreshment and, when the midway rides came in later years, a place of delightful amusement and recreation. The initial allure of Rocky Point was the land itself: 123 acres of beach, meadows, wetlands, woods, and dramatic rocky elevations overlooking the entire upper Narragansett Bay. Did you know Rocky Point was the site of the first use of a telephone by a United States President? In 1877 Alexander Graham Bell called from Providence to President Rutherford B. Hayes who was visiting at Rocky Point. It was just a month or so later, May 10, 1877, that the first telephone was installed in the White House (the White House telephone number? One.). In 1900 the New York Times dubbed Rocky Point "the Coney Island of Rhode Island." John Jacob Astor often visited with his wealthy Newport friends (obviously, that was before he had that fateful 1912 trip on the Titanic). Baseball, too, was a draw for Rhode Islanders to visit Rocky Point. Those who were at Rocky Point for a 1914 game of the Providence Grays would have seen Babe Ruth hit a home run out of the park and into the Narragansett Bay. George M. Cohen first performed "Yankee Doodle Dandy" at Rocky Point. The Three Stooges made many appearances at Rocky Point (and as the article I researched years ago quipped, that was before they went to work in Rhode Island politics). Unfortunately, the second oldest amusement park in America at the time finally drowned in a sea of debt and closed its doors in 1995, the year before I arrived in Rhode Island.

Back to our Exodus reading: The people of Israel had come to their own "Rocky Point" in their desert journey, but it was no resort. However, they are about to discover through the grace of God that this Rocky Point did indeed have a wonderfully refreshing Water Flume, though they didn't yet see it! You might say Moses was between a rock and a hard place; the hard place being the desert wilderness through which they had traveled, the rock being this barren, rocky, arid area where they had arrived. Moses had this increasingly unruly mob on his hands quarreling with him; we are told they are so angry they are about to stone him, blaming him (and, in effect, blaming God Whom Moses represented) for bringing them into the wilderness just to die of thirst. They ask what is starting to become a recurring question: "Is the Lord among us or not?"

Lest we get a bit smug from our vantage point sitting in our comfortable pews in a climate controlled building with plenty of available water and refreshment, I think all of us can admit we know something of how they feel, if we are honest. Many of us have been there; some may be there right now. We encounter a personal crisis or threat or loss, and no matter how good God has been to us all along up to that point in our life's journey, at such times we begin to grumble and question lots of things ... we question our ability, we question our future, we question even our very identity ... and we wonder: Is the Lord really with us or not? In such times of difficulty and crisis, sometimes we may pray with a deeper intensity and passion. But again, if we are honest, sometimes we may cynically question whether or not we should be praying at all, as our faith in God's providence is so shaken. Well, Moses is our model to follow. What does he do? Moses takes the crisis to God. There at this Rocky Point he makes a "phone call" to the President of the Universe. This is his fundamental reflex of faith! He cries out to the Lord. "What am I to do?!"

God replies, in so many words, "Put Me on trial."

Imagine this drama in Exodus 17 as a courtroom scene. The people file suit against God and His representative, Moses. It's The People vs. God. The complaint: God is accused of abandoning Israel, of leading them into the wilderness just to let them die. "Why did you bring us out of Egypt to make us and our children and our livestock die of thirst?" Moses replies, "Why do you want to put God to the test? Why do you want to put God on trial?" The people want a trial, so God accommodates. God directs Moses to walk on before the people, which is the posture of a judge entering a courtroom. Moses the Lawgiver, Moses the Judge, is to be followed by the elders, the representatives of the people; they are the witnesses for the prosecution. Moses is directed to take in his hand the staff with which he struck the Nile. This is the same staff with which he called the plagues of judgment against Egypt. Moses is to pass before the people, with this symbol of judgment in hand, accompanied by the witnesses for the prosecution. In this "courtroom" setting, God says to Moses (17:6), "I will stand before you on the rock." As God is invisible, He gives a point of reference, a point of focus, for the people ... He identifies Himself with the rock. God Himself becomes the Rocky Point. "You see that rock; well, that's Me. That's where I am." He stands in the position of defendant; God is "in the dock" on the rock.

God commands Moses, "Strike the rock!" In effect, God is commanding, "In the presence of this assembly, strike ME with the rod of judgment, Moses!" And Moses lifts the rod of judgment and strikes the rock, the rock which is symbolically identified with God. The imagery portrayed here is significant: God is not guilty. He never abandoned the Israelites, but He nevertheless bears the judgment. God the Rock is struck with the rod of judgment, and what happens as a result? The blessing of God flows out in the form of water which nourishes and refreshes the people of God. Now, the people should stand before God the Judge; God does not stand before people to be judged. He has not abandoned His people, but His people are all too quick to forget Him and abandon His ways when things get a bit difficult! In this trial setting, though, God accepts the role reversal. This is almost a sermon in itself, but this is nothing less than the essence of the Gospel message. Jesus Christ was innocent and took the position of defendant. We deserve judgment, He does not. But the rod of God's judgment came crashing down upon the sinless Christ on the cross on Calvary, as He was stricken for our sin. Because Christ bore the judgment of God by being stricken on the cross, we may receive the outpoured blessings of God. Out of the stricken Rock of Christ flow streams of Living Water to nourish the people of God. As we just sang, "I heard the voice of Jesus say, 'Behold I freely give the living water, thirsty one, bow down and drink and live.' I came to Jesus and I drank of that life-giving stream; my thirst was quenched my soul revived, and now I live in Him." I only have time to briefly comment on our Epistle lesson, where Paul, who is no stranger to hardship and suffering, exhorts the church at Rome to rejoice in rocky adversity, because "... suffering produces perseverance, perseverance produces character, and character produces hope ... and such hope does not disappoint us, because God's love has been poured into our hearts through the Holy Spirit whom He has given us." (Romans 5:3-5)

Yes, God has a wonderful way of making the rocky points of our lives places of His divine refreshment through Jesus Christ, the rock of our salvation, where we may drink deeply from the living water of His nourishing Spirit, places where we may discover deeper levels of His grace and love. As we trust Him, keep conversation with Him, cry out to Him, eventually we discover the refreshing presence of His Spirit ... sustaining us in those moments when we have lost confidence in ourselves, giving us hope in those moments when we have lost confidence in life itself. Thirsts are quenched, crises are endured, lives are renewed, souls are refreshed and we find the strength to go on.

And unlike Rhode Island's Rocky Point, the Water Flume at God's Rocky Point has not gone bankrupt, it is still in business. Jesus Christ has paid off all the debts and more!
